

Cavemen or Chemists?

Humans have been using and manipulating substances from the world around them since prehistoric times. Control of combustion (fire) was critical to the evolution of early humans, and cave paintings dated back 100,000 years have been found.

Clearly these early humans knew how to control rudimentary chemical reactions, and could make paints out of ochres, but were they chemists? What is a chemist?